experience and shouldn't be putting themselves into that position. Young people sometimes are enticed to use alcohol and with this bill, Senator Chambers, quite frankly I believe that it would be a deterrent to keep them away from consuming alcohol.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: I understand that, but I want to bring you back to the question that I asked. Why will you punish more harshly the one who knows and understands least and punish less harshly the one who understands more?

SENATOR JANSSEN: Well, let me put it this way. I'm still not going to answer your question directly.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Okay, then I don't want you...

SENATOR JANSSEN: But I want to...

SENATOR CHAMBERS: No, that's okay on your time do that then. Thank you, Senator Janssen.

SENATOR JANSSEN: All right.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: You did help to some extent. My time is about to run out. You know why I keep referring to religion? Because there are people on this floor who want a preacher up there and apparently they believe it but they really don't. So I'm showing that they don't even believe the underlying philosophy. The underlying philosophy of Christianity is that culpability is determined based on what the person knew, what the person's intent, and all these related things are that play into that. Where a person did not know much, the person is not going to be held as culpable and Jesus did establish that principle in the following words: Where much is known, much is required. He who knew his master's will and did it not shall be beaten with many stripes. He who knew not his master's will and did it not shall be beaten with few. That was his way of saying in that archaic way that the more you know and the more responsible the position is that you hold, the greater will be your punishment when you violate this provision. Somebody else who doesn't know as much, who does not have the same degree of
